

Tom HOWES

Deputy Head of Unit A4 – Economic Analysis and Financial Instruments
Directorate General for Energy
European Commission

Tom Howes is an official of the energy department of the European Commission. Having worked on renewable energy policy and market integration issues for some years, he is now deputy head of the economic analysis and financial instruments unit. This unit provides economic modelling and data for energy policy development (including the 2030 package, prices & costs report, energy security study) and also works on developing financial instruments necessary to attract investment into the energy sector to help achieve Europe's energy policy goals. He is an economist and has previously worked for the Australian and British governments and the IEA.
